You can tell that the teams are really moving by watching them during the pre-match presentation. Players can run at every second and can even dribble and pass even while moving. The soccer AI has been massively improved as well. It used to forget what you did even after a whole season, but now it's getting better. The animation has been improved, but it would have been better if the timing and rhythm were just right. Passing animation was badly timed because of the jolting moves and the player seemed to be running in slow motion while moving. But, like all things, the problem is far less noticeable when you get used to it. All in all, the animation is a little behind the reality, but it's still better than FIFA 21 and there are no real signs of glitches and bugs. When you jump over a wall or tackle someone, you can feel that the players' bodies sink in the ground and the player's momentum is reduced as he loses his balance. If you sprint with a long run, you will lose sprint speed every time, which makes it difficult to defend and counterattack. If you sprint from one side to another, it will slow you down. I found myself getting out of breath by sprinting from one side to the other. Players will do stupid things like diving and catching the ball. Maybe it's because the ball was soft and didn't bounce like it should, or the game modes were saved after FIFA 21, but the referees couldn't tell whether a player made contact with the ball. Hence, it was a bit difficult to know whether a foul was called or not. You won't get seriously injured from a tackle in FIFA 22 because the physics have been improved. A good tackle can knock the ball free, leaving you open. So, even if you get tackled directly, you don't get cramps, sprained ankles, or broken legs. It's easier to make a pass from behind and if you get tackled directly, the ball will go right to the player who is tackling you. You can also tackle using the new "Interception" attack that allows you to change the direction in which the ball will be received. This new attack comes from the real-life move. While the move looks complicated, it works well and even if you intercept a pass, there is a good chance to win the Underneath each ball, the game uses a new blend of sensors to capture player movement and even their immediate actions. This data is used to dynamically update the game's physics system, which adjusts the tracking parameters to properly reflect the new information. In doing this, the game detects balls that move from player to player, which allows for players to be more predisposed to getting on the end of a soccer first touch. This allows for a more natural and responsive gameplay.
